Sister Rosetta Tharpe Gospel Train Rar

If one were to attempt to delve way back in American history to find the roots of our folk music, the digging would sooner or later come up with "gospel" singing. For that is music of a deep-rooted folk tradition which goes way back into other and somewhat more obscure times and places. Not long after the original Thirteen Colonies revolted and won their freedom, "revolt" emotions held sway even in the churches and the people started to turn from their stringent church ways by merely adapting the popular tunes and rhythms into secular music. The result was heightened religious fervor. And in the first 25 years of the 19th Century the Negro Protestant churches went through another religious revival which, again, had its effect on and was affected by the secular "folk" music.

So it has been throughout the history of the Protestant churches — the folk music became the secular music and the secular music, at the same time, became part of the folk traditions. This intertwining of religion with popular tunes and tempo was most evident in the Negro churches.

In more recent times, gospel singers have brought the modern musical instruments into the churches and with them, the jazz and blues sounds.

One of the all-time great exponents of the "gospel" song is, of course, Sister Rosetta Tharpe. This wonderful revival singer of the Pentecostal or Holiness congregations has taken her music into revival meetings and other church services across the country for years — and she has always attracted and held spellbound the packed meeting places. Rosetta Tharpe has proven, a thousand times over, that she has a greater hold on her audience, a deeper feeling for the
